Ninety-sixth Year No. 33-B Thursday, August

ARCHBISHOP MARCEL LEFEBVRE and Father Hector Bolduc conducted the press conference at 8 a.m. Wednesday.

The Pilgrimage To St. Marys

by Dorothy N. Hoobler

When Archbishop Lefebvre arrived on the campus to lead the 5 p.m. Mass on August 13, the crowd which greeted him was both large and enthusiastic. It was possibly the largest gathering of people on campus since the November the dinner which was catered by Ballinger's of Augusta, Ks. Their vans, loaded with the hot and delicious food, made the trip with the meal already prepared and ready for serving. I didn't even want to ask how many hundreds of meat balls it took for all that dampen the enthusiasm of the "conferees," who continued their seminars, lectures, and choir practice. Once again, director David Read led the practice for the Pontifical Mass and the Vespers. Mr. Read, a Londoner, has sung as a bass soloist with the London Symphony and B.B.C. Philharmonic orchestra. Pointing out various passages which I'd heard them rehearse, he explained the difficulty in reading the music of the Gregorian chant. The notes are square, because the music was written in the days of quill pens. Few of the Latin chant hymnals are still in existence, except for those in university libraries or laying forgotten in dusty, unused church music cabinets, he said. Mr.

warmth and devotion. Television cameras filmed his greetings to the pilgrims. The Archbishop is a gray-haired man of 73 with a kindly smile which belies the words so often used to describe him. Many news reports used terms like "rebel," "controversial," and "maverick" because of his role in the conflict within the Church since the Vatican II Council. The members of the Society of St. Pius X obviously disagree, and repeated their display of affection with a prolonged and rousing acclamation when he arrived at the evening banquet hall.

Approximately 450 people attended well as the food.

Tuesday's weather was cold and rainy, proving the truth in the cliché, "If you don't like Kansas weather, just wait a day or two. It will change." Even the steady drizzle didn't seem to

for the older worshippers. Vespers -- even the word seems to convey a feeling of calm rest and a peace with one's self and with God.

The press conference was scheduled for early Wednesday morning and author Michael Davies briefed us on the life of Marcel Lefebvre shortly before his arrival. Lefebvre makes a striking appearance: the richness of the colors of his robe accents his fair complexion and blue eyes. The questions were direct with no punches pulled, and the answers were just as frankly given. Although the Archbishop does speak English, he usually answered in French and Father Hector Bolduc acted as translator. Yes, "The relationship with Pope John Paul II is cordial. He is resolved to find a solution." He explained that one man, not a committee, is acting as intermediary with the Pope, and the latest direct meeting was on June 25. "We are awaiting word from the Pope on the use of the Latin Mass," he said with a hopeful smile. No, the Pope did not condemn the ordination of the 34 priests at Econe in June, and the fact that he made no comment is considered promising. Yes, the seminary established at Econe was considered a valid one by the Church, otherwise, he pointed out, why would Rome have bothered to condemn it later?

The documents, letters, and conversations between Pope Paul VI and Marcel Lefebvre are listed in chronological order in the Davies book, Apologia Pro Marcel Lefebvre, or called Apologia in the shortened version of the title. Davies elaborated on many of the answers to the questions, and then continued his explanations in his after-the-banquet lecture. He pointed out that the liturgy the traditionalists use was not banned by the Vatican II Council. It is the later interpretation of the "spirit of Vatican II" which has created the conflict, he charged. Pointing out their objections to the ecumenical movement, Davies said with complete candor, "Traditionalists are not anti-Protestant, but they believe in what they believe and they should say so honestly."

Following the press conference, the Archbishop joined the procession formed for the cornerstone-laying ceremony at the Immaculata Chapel. They slowly proceeded up the steps, past the gaping holes which revealed the burned-out sanctuary with its Italian marble altars carefully sealed against the elements. It was a moving ceremony, an expression of faith in the future of St. Mary's College and in the rebuilding of the chapel. Waiting while the Assumption Chapel was being prepared for the Pontifical High Mass.

the rapt faces of reverent worshipers? In his sermon, delivered in French and then translated, the Archbishop reaffirmed the desire to rebuild the chapel. For the Day of Assumption message, he used scripture passages to point out that Mary is the example and teacher of the faith. Holding the golden staff in his left hand, he charged the congregation to be "the leaven of the Church." Communion was distributed first to the children making their First Holy Communion, and then to the huge crowd of believers. The Mass ended.

At the closing banquet attended by approximately 1,200, Father Bolduc expressed his thanks to so many who helped to make this first pilgrimage such a success. Appreciation was also extended to the city and to the residents of St. Marys for their cooperation this past year. Archbishop Lefebvre will take back to Econe a beautiful picture of the Immaculata as it was when he first saw it two years ago. He also carries with him a cordial invitation to return again soon for the dedication of a rebuilt chapel. The activities on the Day of Assumption ended with confirmation, a candlelight procession, and the Benediction. The first pilgrimage ended Thursday with hourly masses and prayers of gratitude.

This has been a week for intense and mixed feeling. For the members of the Society, it has been a joyous time, a dream come true, the answer to a prayer. For the more than 2,000 who throughout the centuries, they also died -- defending the right of each individual to worship God in whatever manner he chooses. And so, even for me, the Pilgrimage to St. Marys ended with a prayer, a petition that each one of us, whatever our faith, will come to know the joy and fulfillment of the song of the angels at His birth, "Gloria in Excelsis Deo . . . and on earth, peace, good will to men."
